The Jewish Museum of Australia: Gandel Centre of Judaica supports the ‘Yes’ case for the Voice to Parliament.

The Museum recognises that the Voice to Parliament is a crucial step towards redressing historical injustices, fostering a society that embraces inclusivity and equity, and honouring the knowledge of Australia's First Peoples.

Understanding the profound value of amplifying diverse voices and cultivating mutual understanding, the Museum strives to provide a platform where all individuals can contribute to shaping a more promising future.

Gideon Kline, Museum President, said ‘By supporting the establishment of an inclusive and representative advisory body for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples, the Museum upholds our core principles of Chesed (compassion, kindness), and Tikkun Olam (the collective aspiration to repair and improve the world).’

‘In recognising the interconnectedness of various struggles, the Museum acknowledges the transformative power of unity in effecting positive change.’ Kline added.

Noè Harsel, Museum Director & CEO recognises the heroic actions and unwavering resolve displayed by William Cooper, Yorta Yorta Elder and political activist. ‘Cooper fearlessly voiced the plight of Jews in Germany during a time when the world turned a blind eye. His act serves as a poignant reminder of the significance of supporting those who try to stand up against injustice.’

Harsel added ‘At the Jewish Museum, we illuminate Jewish Life and are a place for all people.’
